Best Golfers in England to Take Part in the Tournament—Gene Sarazen and Other United States Players Make Good

HARRY VARDON DOES NOT MAKE LOW ENOUGH SCORE—OUT OF TOURNAMENT

J. H. Taylor, Veteran Golfer, Makes Best Score of Day's Play—Walter Havers Is Second Best—Hagen Third

HOYLAKES, England, June 24.—Eighty-seven golfers have qualified for play in the British open championship.

Most of the great names in British golf will be in the list of those battling this year for the championship.

Among those of world fame who failed was Harry Vardon, who had 114 strokes, one above the limit for the 36 holes.

Taylor leads, leading all the 87 and amateurs and professionals who sought to qualify yesterday over the Hoylake and Porthcawl courses was the famous British professional, J. H. Taylor. Arthur Havers, who was winning trophies in the school and honours game when the great champion, Hagen, was a babe in arms, took his leading edge of 18 yesterday over the Hoylake course. Taylor today added a 75 at Porthcawl—an aggregate of 142 strokes.

Hagen, who had 144, but a few of the others who qualified had made ranging between 138 and 148. Those above the last figure will be merely spectators when the championship rounds begin.

Most of the former champions both of America and Great Britain, Alister, the seventh, Fred Hunter, who was beaten in the 1914 tour, and a few others, are in the list. The United States players who are in the list are Walter Hagen, Gene Sarazen, MacDonald Smith, Sam Snead and C. Nichols.

To those in search of thrills, from the play of a man struggling with all his might to secure the coveted title of champion, the British open is a most interesting event. PENGUIN BRAYS LIKE JACKASS

Dr. Frank M. Chapman Returns From Cruise Through Andes

In fact, among the chief spoils of the expedition was portable scenery of all sorts—rocks, flowers, leaves, plants, branches of trees, pampas grass, thistles, ferns and all the detail that goes to finish a South American landscape. This will be used in creating backgrounds and fore-

A color camera and a landscape artist were taken along by this particular background-hunting expedition. Dr. Chapman was accompanied by Mr. Chapman, Lord William

Very, a brother of the Duke of Northumberland; Frederick C. Walcott, Conservation Commissioner of Connecticut, and Miss Helen Walcott, who painted the sketches. Part of their trip was "through the Andes in a steamer" because they traveled among the islands off southern Chile, islands which in reality are the peaks of submerged mountains of the Andean chain.

Brays Like Jackaws

One of the most interesting birds discovered on the trip was a penguin

"Thick forests grow right to the water's edge on these islands off the Chilean coast," said Mr. Chapman, "and I could not believe it when I was told that some of them were full of penguins. There are also associated with barren Antio waste, The man who told me about this was the captain of our steamer, a man named Yale, and a son of the Yale who was on the Beagle when

"The tide was fairly low, and as we approached the shore, we found distinct paths worn in the stone by the penguins through generations and centuries. On the island itself we found a perfect network of runways, lanes and paths worn clean by the of the penguins. Right from under our feet came the perfect story of a jackass for these forest penguins are closely related to the jackass penguin group. In holes under the rocks and openings in the trees they were nesting. They had adapted themselves perfectly to the forest life."

Steamer Duck Studied

Lord William Percy joined the expedition to carry out his extensive studies of the wild duck, and culture pearl, like the precious stone of the laboratory, will be proved unprofitable as a commercial proposition.
